

Trump In Exile

By Geoffrey A. Fields

The Democrat Party declared war on Donald Trump. The state of US Politics prior to 2015, was routine in nature, going along with the status quo. Many Americans viewed politics as, not to downplay the significance but, something playing in the background. It didn't dominate our everyday lives to the degree it seems today. The Washington D.C. political structure always claimed they wanted people involved, until that happened. When Trump was elected the entire world changed on that day. With historic enthusiasm, based on what Former Trump Advisor and War Room Host Steve Bannon describes as an "economic nationalism"- "america first" agenda, President Trump is to many the best President America has had in a very long time.

October 15, 2019, news reports surfaced exposing something that would engulf the world. The headline was "CENSORSHIP: TWITTER ANNOUNCES NEW RESTRICTIONS FOR WORLD LEADERS", A blatant move to block Trump's reach as the election season heated up. Understanding the role Big Tech giants have on public narrative is key to understanding the frontal assault Trump is currently under.

This played out while he was in office as we saw a cloud of investigations swirl overhead. Many which we now know were political hit jobs made up by Democrats to smear him in the press, mainly, the Russia hoax, attempts to tie him to dictators, race attacks, impeachments and Twitter's decision to remove a sitting President on Jan 9, 2021, to name a few wild ones.

Today political attacks intensify. Democrats are trying to scrub Trump from history. As we speak, at the State and Federal level, Democrats are attempting to concoct ways to barr Trump from ever holding office again. Between the 1/6 riot committee in congress, NY AG James' investigation into Trump Org, Banned from media platforms and a biased media - Trump in many ways is in exile.

To understand these attacks you need to understand Trump's policies, political enthusiasm and reach. Evidence of support is shown in 74.2 million votes as the incumbent in 2020. For reference, President Obama lost votes from his 2008 bid compared to his re-election. Donald Trump gained 12 million votes compared to his 2016 bid. Gains made among independents and the black and latino community were record breaking. These gains happened because Trump performed as President. He led America on the world stage and domestically, championed America First ideals and fulfilled many of his campaign promises.

These are what I call the 'foundational reasons' for attack. Trump got people involved, people from all backgrounds. The current silencing of Trump and his supporters is sickening. Politics are supposed to be open debate and quite frankly the cancel culture Progressive, Socialist Democrats have created is dangerous. It exposes the reality they don't want people involved. Only their handpicked globalist cheerleaders.
